MEDICATED MILE AS A REMEDY FOR THEVING—How a Policeman Unconsciously Took an Emetic.—Numerous persons residing in various portions of the city, leave vessels on their door-steps or window-sills, for the purpose of receiving their milk in the morning, that they may not be aroused from their slumbers, as those who serve them in this capacity arrive before they are ready to leave the arms of the drowsy God. For sometime past, the lacteal fluid that was left for Dr.
Moore, No. 125 Richmond-street, has disappeared before the family was ready to use it, and every morning the pitcher was found empty, bearing evidence, however, of having been filled as usual.

The Doctor suffered in reticence for many days, and at last, tired of drinking milkless MEDICATED MILE AS A REMEDY FOR THIRY-

The Doctor suffered in reticence for many days, and at last, tired of drinking milkless coffee, determined to detect the thief, if possible. A few nights ago he put an emetic in the pitcher and left it on his door-step, fully satisfied that whoever drank it would not again be very fond of milk. The morning came, and with it the dairyman, but no less punctual was the petty thief, who proved to be a policeman.

NATIONAL THEATER.—Boureicault's new Irish drams, Colleen Baum, will be produced at this establishment this evening. It has met with a great success in the East, and, we are informed, will be put upon the stage here with great care. Heretofore, no matter how many clouds vailed the silver queen of night from the bridegroom, Earth, if the calendar said sho ought to shine, no gas was lighted in our streets. Pedestrians stumbled through our thoroughfares, and broke their noses, heads and limbs by falling down cellar-ways; assassins lurked in somber corners, and did diabolical deeds in a darkness that would not reveal their whereabouts, and burglars evaded "the most senseless and fit" men that were ever made constables of the watch through the aid of a Memphian gloom that no eye could penetrate.

Although the streets were full of gaslamps, no one was lighted. Citizens would run against them at midnight, or in an effort to avoid them, fall in the gutters; and belated timlers askirs.

capacity, that a knot firmly tied and fastened, is more sure to hold than a loop, or series of loops, with a straight thread running through them, the end left loose; and this is, in its most simple practical form, just the point at issue between the advocates of the Grover & Baker and "shuttle-stitches."

The Grover & Baker stitch is the firm and lasting knot; the shuttle-stitch is the series of loops with a straight thread running through them.

Grover & Baker's Machines' work, in their peculiar stitch, and fabrics put together by reculiar stitch, and fabrics put together by it, may wear out and drop to pieces from original weakness or hard usage, hat come apart or give way at the seams they can not; they will hold together when the cloth or calico around them hangs in rags and tatters. The almanac was the Bible of the Gas Company. Moon rises 6:30; sets 4:27—no light that night, unless perchauce the almanac happened to be correct. For us Cynthia might have just as well revolved round Herschel; for if she rose, not all her sweet, reflected rays could pierce the overhanging night, or reach this gloom-enshrouded sphere. How can astronomers foretell a cloudy sky, and if they could, what care the manufacturers of gas so long as they are satisfied that—Moon rises 6:30; sets 4:27. City governments are carcless, too, as they, and oft delight in darkness deep and impenetrable as their own stupidities.

Thus passed the weeks, and thus the months went by. The Memphian midnights brought their offspring forth and, ere the morn, grew pale with horror at the deep damastion of their deeds. Now all is changed, and now is the Latin absurdity, heavs a non lucendo, made a glowing fact. Messrs. Grover & Baker, though, were not satisfied with their first invaluable improvement, which alone was sufficient to make their machines the very best yet presented for public approval; but, having distanced all rivals, they went to work to surpass themselves, and their patent of 1851 was rapidly followed by other patents in the ensuing years of 1852, 1853 and 1858, each of which was granted for some new device which assisted in the attainment of their great aim in business—the manufacture of a sewing-machine which should be, not merely almost, but entire perfection.

In this object they finally succeeded when they secured their patent for the "noiseless" machine, which not only runs with greater ease and economy, and with the certainty of producing neater and more enduring results than any other machine, but at the same time, is so managed as to do away with the irritating rumble and clicking that had formerly rendered the work-room of a large shirt factory a pandemonium of bowildering noise, and the presence of a machine in a private house little else than a nuisance to all who chanced to be in any room near that in which it was put in operation. transferred, because of a verbal promise by

EXAMINATION OF KNORR FOR THE KHEING OF HEITZMAN.—In our yesterday's issue, we noticed a fatal affray that occurred in this city, on the night previous, but the lateness of the bour at which we received the information, procluded us from giving the full particulars or getting the correct names. Yesterday morning the homicide, whose name is Geo. Knorr, went to Covington and surrendered himself, and was taken to Newport and lodged in jail.

In the evening he was brought before Justices Conlan and Sine, for a preliminary trial, and a number of witnesses examined, among whom was the widow of the deceased, and sister of the accused.

It appears that Knorr, with his wife, had been boarding with Heitzman during the summer, and that some time since he went away for some weeks, leaving Mrs. K. at Heitzman's. When he returned Mrs. H. in a most confidential manner, informed him that he had better watch his wife, whereupon he demanded an explanation, but was refused, as it might create a difficulty, which the informant had no dealire to do. Knorr, however, insisted, and after promising that he would cause no disturbance, she told him that ahe had observed improper conduct on the part of Mrs. Knorr and a man named Benjamin Lewis, a hoarder at the house. Knorr immediately went to Lewis, who denied the charge and left his boarding-house on the strength of the matter.

On the night of the housicide, Lewis and Knorr went to Heitzman's house, when the family and boarders were eating suppen in order to obtain an explanation. They entered the bar-room of the house, when Mrs. H. bearing them, came in, but on observing that it was her brother, ordered him to leave the house which he well-suppers in ordered to be the process of the house when Mrs.

Her husband soon after followed, selzed Kaorr, when a struggle ensued for a short time, after Knorr left, and Heizman ran behind the counter, exclaiming at the same time, that he was stabled. Hefore any of the parties reached him he had fallen on the floor, and ceased to breathe.

The grounds upon which Mrs. K. was accused, was that she had drank a glass of beer at Lowis's expense, and the parties had taken a walk together.

After a full hearing of the evidence, Knorr was held over in the sum of $1,000, for his appearance at the next term of the Circuit Court, on a charge of manslaughter.

have assumed the marked and unquestion-able lead which acknowledged superiority

The Improvement is Imbor-envine Machines.

The mysteries of "look-stitch" and "shuttle-stitch" may not seem a very promising subject of interest to the uninitiated, yet the war waged among the sewing-machine manufacturers as to their relative merits and claims on public patronage and attention, have rendered it, for the time being, one of importance to the whole community, and of sufficient consideration to occupy a prominent place in the columns of the public press.

The fact is, we are all of us some way concerned in ascertaining which may be the best machine now offered in the market; for there is scarcely a family or individual that does not, to a greater or lesser extent, trust to the perfection of mechanical invention, as applied to the art of sewing, for the certainty of reliance on the durability of nearly every garment in common use.

The controversy has been carried on so openly and conducted so ably, as to enable almost any one to arrive at a just and accurate comprehension of the matter at issue, and the general result seems to be an almost universal judgment in favor of the machine made by Grover & Baker; a judgment that, from present appearances, no competition in the field seems likely to unsettle.

Simply because the experiments made by professional operators, and the experience of private purchasers, all go to prove that the

The Commissioners have determined that they will hold together when the cloth or calico around them hangs in rags and tatters.

The sewing-machine in its crudest shape was a great boon—a marvelous agent in the great work of civilization. At once the good friend of the poor seamstress and the faithful servant of the wealthy household, it promised to bring both classes to that near level where an approach to similar habits, wants, and comforts lays the true foundation of a system in which all ranks and conditions aspire to be equally free, happy and contented.

But, unfortunately, some of the first inventors of sewing-machines, and some of the large capitalists who subsequently undertook their extensive manufacture, were content to let their machines remain in a state of partial perfection. They found that the great rush for any sewing-machine was rendering them rapidly rich without further exertions. So they quietly rested from their labors, and garnered in the spontaneous harvest, not thinking that the field was but beginning to be cultivated and that more energetic enterprise than theirs might, by pursuing a bold and liberal policy, reap a handsomer reward than had ever come to them. Such has, however, been the case.

While Messra. Wheeler & Wilson and their less distinguished competitors were glorifying themselves over the lucrative demand for their "shuttle-stitch" machines, Mr. Wm. O. Grover was patiently and conscientiously seeking to perfect a machine by which to overcome the serious objections made to that stitch on the score of its insecurity and want of strength and elasticity.

Mr. Grover perfected a machine which achieved these great results—strength, security and elasticity of seam—in 1851, and from that time his progress in the business has been an uninterrupted career of mechanical and pecuniary triumph. Associated in the firm of Grover, Baker & Co., he has introduced sewing-machines of more perfect construction to public use than all other manulacturers put together, and there is little doubt that, as the Grover & Baker machine become endar, but when Darkness drives the Daygod down the horizon in the West, gas shall take his place and dispute his sable highness's title to the throne. He rules no more our city during night; no more in alleys, streets and lanes, his myrmidons sends forth; no longer casts his sable pall upon the sleeping town. His reign is over; the battle has been fought and won; and henceforth, instead of paying five and thirty thousand paltry dollars for the privilege of wandering through dark and dreary streets, we shall have them always full of light, at a cost of six and fifty thousand dollars for each and every year. every year.

Of ceurse, Grover & Baker's machines have their detractors. We are told that their famous Grover & Baker "stitch" is absolutely "so strong that it can not be ripped at all." The admission of its strength is honest, at all events; and, as to the impossibility of ripping, it is true no amount of wear can harm it; but the instruction given to each purchaser will enable a child to eradicate a false seam, or take out old seams, in articles that require altering, with the utmost quickness and facility.

As to the statements that it necessitates the consumption of a greater quantity of

As to the statements that it necessitates the consumption of a greater quantity of thread than other machines, actual comparison proves the contrary. In the first place, unlike other machines, those of Grover & Baker can be worked without any appreciable "waste." In a continuous straight seam any number of separate articles can be stitched, one after the other, and afterward separated without stopping to fasten off; as in a series of shirt-fronts, for instance, on which, with any stitch but Grover & Baker's in a series of shirt-fronts, for instance, on which, with any stitch but Grover & Baker's, so much time is thrown away in securing the ends by hand with a common needle.

And, then, it has been found that in a given amount of average sewing, the Grover & Baker stitch does not consume a yard more of thread to form its firm and perfect lock, than the shuttle-stitch requires to take up its loose and destructible loop, so great is the waste at the end of seams.
